

A FIVE-DAY COMPANION GUIDE

---

The Business Breakthrough Challenge

Companion Guide

LIVE · JUNE 8-12 · 10AM-11:30AM MT

Before we begin.

You've signed up for this challenge because something in your business stopped moving.

You've tried more. You've tried different.

Neither has worked the way you thought it would.

The five days ahead are not about adding more. They're about seeing what's actually been in the way.

This guide is the place you'll do the slower part of that work — the part that doesn't happen on a live call. The part where you stop, sit with what you saw, and let it land.

Bring a pen.

Bring some space.

Treat your time with this as part of the work, not separate from it.

Jason

How to use this guide.

Each day, you'll join the live session at 10am MT. Then, sometime later that day, you'll come back here.

You'll find:

- A short framing of what we covered
- A few questions to sit with
- Room to write

Don't rush it.

The questions are the work.

If you only have ten minutes, take ten minutes. If you have an hour, take the hour. What matters more than time is honesty.

This guide will mean different things at different points across the week. Return to it.

DAY ONE

---

The Ceiling

Uncover the real reason your business stopped growing — and which of three patterns is keeping you capped.

JUNE 8 · 10AM-11:30AM MT

The pattern is the ceiling.

Every business that stops growing is being stopped by something.

It's almost never the tactic.

It's a pattern. A way of operating that worked once — that built what you've built — and that has quietly become the thing capping what comes next.

There are three I see most often. Today is about naming yours.

The Pusher

When growth stalls, you add hours. More output. More pressure.

You've built your business on drive. You're proud of it. You've earned what you have.

But the harder you push, the more depleted you feel — because the problem you're trying to push through doesn't respond to effort.

What looks like grit from the outside feels like a slow erosion from the inside.

The body always knows.

The Thinker

When growth stalls, you think harder.

You rewrite the offer. You re-architect the funnel. You open a fresh doc called "2026 Strategy v7."

It feels strategic. It feels productive. It feels like progress.

But underneath, thinking has become the place you go to avoid the risk of moving. Analysis has become a version of action that doesn't actually require courage.

You will not think your way to the next level. You'll have to feel your way there.

---

The Dreamer

When growth stalls, you reach for the next vision.

A new idea. A new direction. A new model. A new niche.

You're grounded in your heart. You follow what feels alive. That part is real — and it's rare.

But your business is a river without banks. There's energy and movement, but nothing to hold the direction.

Without the scaffolding of strategy — and the discipline to stay — the life force goes everywhere and lands nowhere. Nothing actually moves.

You don't have a problem with vision. You have a problem with staying. And the business you keep imagining will only become real when you build the banks that can hold the river.

Sit with these.

- 1 Which of these three patterns is your default mode of operating? Be honest.
You may see traces of more than one. There's usually a primary.
- 2 How has this pattern served you? What has it built? Give it real credit. It got you here for a reason.
- 3 What is it costing you now — in revenue, in energy, in the kind of business you actually want?
- 4 What are you afraid might happen if you let it go?
- 5 What might become possible if it shifted?

A CLOSING PROMPT

*In one sentence, name the ceiling you've been bumping up against.
Write it plainly. This is what we'll work with all week.*

DAY TWO

---

The Path Forward

A different way to operate — and what becomes possible when the pattern is no longer in the way.

JUNE 9 · 10AM-11:30AM MT

A three-faculty job.

There is a way to operate as an entrepreneur that doesn't require you to lean entirely on one pattern.

Most of the entrepreneurs I work with were never taught it. They were taught to be smart. They were taught to be disciplined. They were taught to execute.

What they weren't taught is that running a business is not a one-faculty job. It's a three-faculty job.

And every pattern from Day One is, at the root, an over-reliance on one of three centers — and an under-reliance on the other two.

Heart.

The seat of desire, intuition, knowing.

The part of you that tells you what's actually true, what's actually wanted, what's actually next.

It moves quietly. It rarely shouts. It cannot be argued with.

Head.

The seat of strategy, structure, discernment.

The part of you that takes what the heart knows and translates it into a plan that can be executed.

Brilliant when in service. Tyrannical when in charge.

Will.

The seat of action, follow-through, embodiment.

The part of you that takes what's been seen and decided and moves it into the world.

Without it, nothing happens. With only it, the wrong things happen, faster.

A business led by only one of these eventually plateaus.

The Pusher leads from will.

The Thinker leads from head.

The Dreamer leads from heart, but never lets the head and will catch up.

The path forward is not to develop one more. The path forward is integration.

heart → head → will

The flow has a direction.

In an integrated business, energy moves in a specific direction.

It begins in the heart — the felt sense of what's true, what's wanted, what's next. It moves through the head — where vision becomes plan, where desire becomes strategy. It lands in the will — where the plan becomes action, and the action becomes result.

When this flow is intact, the work feels coherent. You're not pushing. You're not avoiding. You're moving in a direction that makes sense from the inside out.

When the flow breaks down, the business starts to feel the way you've been describing it. Heavy. Forced. Off.

- 1 Of the three centers, which is the strongest in your business right now?
- 2 Which is the most underdeveloped?
- 3 Where does your flow break down? Heart-to-head, or head-to-will?
- 4 What would shift if you led from your weakest center for a week?

A CLOSING PROMPT

Picture your business operating in full integration — heart-led, head-clarified, will-embodied.

Don't strategize it. Just see it. Write what comes.

DAY THREE

---

The Clarity Beneath the Strategy

The decision you've been avoiding has an answer. Today is where we'll find it.

JUNE 10 · 10AM-11:30AM MT

The decision you've been circling.

There is almost always a decision you've been circling.

You know the one. It's been on your list for weeks. Maybe months. Maybe longer.

You've taken it apart in your head. You've made cases for both sides. You've workshopped it with friends, mentors, AI.

And still — no clarity.

The reason is rarely that you don't have enough information. It's that the part of you doing the deliberating doesn't have access to the answer.

Today is about reaching the answer. Not by thinking harder. By bringing the question to all three centers in turn — and letting each one speak.

The practice.

The instructions are simple. They will not feel simple.

1 Name the decision.

Write it down, plainly. One sentence.

2 Ask the heart.

Drop into your body. Let go of analysis. What does the deepest part of you actually want? Not what's smart. Not what's safe. What does it know?

3 Ask the head.

Now turn to strategy. Given what the heart said — what's the actual smart way through? What does the path look like? What needs to be true?

4 Ask the will.

Now turn to action. What is the first concrete move? When? With whom?

The order matters.

Heart, then head, then will. If you reverse it — if you start with the will or the head — you'll end up where you've been.

- 1 The specific challenge or decision I brought to this:
- 2 What did the heart say?
- 3 What did the head say?
- 4 What did the will say?
- 5 Where did the three centers agree? Where did they conflict?
- 6 Based on this integrated guidance, what feels like the right next move?
- 7 What has it been costing me to not make this move?

A CLOSING PROMPT

*The clearest answer you got today might be small. A single sentence.
A single move.*

Trust it. The next layer reveals itself only after this one is acted on.

DAY FOUR

---

The Five Pillars of Profitability

A live diagnostic on your business. Leave knowing your number-one strategic block and where to focus for the next ninety days.

JUNE 11 · 10AM-11:30AM MT

Engine and vehicle.

The inner work is the engine. The strategy is the vehicle. Today we look at the vehicle.

Every profitable online business — whether it sells coaching, consulting, courses, services, or expertise — moves clients through five pillars, in order.

If any one of them is broken, the business plateaus. If any one of them is unbuilt, the business doesn't yet exist.

Most entrepreneurs I work with have built three or four of them well, and one of them is quietly holding the whole thing back. They've usually been working on the wrong pillar for months.

Today is about finding the right one.

01 Visibility

The pillar of attention. New eyes, new awareness, new people entering your world. Without visibility, the rest of the system has nothing to work with.

02 Nurture

The pillar of relationship. What happens between someone finding you and being ready to buy. Trust, depth, repeated exposure to your perspective and your way of seeing.

03 Conversion

The pillar of decision. The moment attention becomes commitment. Where the right person says yes — clearly, cleanly, with their whole body.

04 Delivery

The pillar of transformation. The actual experience your clients have once they're in. What changes for them. How well it lands. The truth of what you do.

05 Continuity

The pillar of compounding. What happens after the result is delivered. Renewal. Referral. Deeper work. The flywheel that turns one client into a long arc of revenue.

visibility → nurture → conversion → delivery → continuity

A weakness early in the chain limits everything downstream. A weakness late in the chain limits the value of everything upstream.

Find the weakest pillar.

Take each pillar one at a time. Be precise.

- 1 Visibility — How dialed in is this pillar in your business right now? (1–10.)
- 2 Nurture — Same.
- 3 Conversion — Same.
- 4 Delivery — Same.
- 5 Continuity — Same.
- 6 Which pillar is the weakest?
- 7 What has it cost you to leave it where it is? Be specific. Money. Energy. Momentum. Time.
- 8 What would become possible in the next 90 days if you actually addressed it?
- 9 Which pattern from Day One has been keeping you from addressing it?

A CLOSING PROMPT

"For the next 90 days, the pillar I am giving real attention to is _____."

Don't pick the one you want to work on. Pick the one you've been avoiding.

DAY FIVE

---

Make It Stick

What it takes to make the shift last — so what you saw this week becomes how you actually operate going forward.

JUNE 12 · 10AM-11:30AM MT

Old beliefs in motion.

The patterns from Day One are not character flaws. They are old beliefs in motion.

At some point — usually early, usually before you had words for it — you learned something about how the world worked, how money worked, what success required, what was safe and what wasn't.

That belief got built into the way you operate. It has been running quietly underneath every decision you've made in your business since.

It's what reasserts itself any time the insight from a week like this starts to fade.

Today is about meeting it directly.

What you've seen this week.

- The pattern that has been capping you (Day One)
- The integrated way of operating that resolves it (Day Two)
- The clarity that becomes available when you operate that way (Day Three)
- The strategic pillar you've been avoiding (Day Four)

What hasn't happened yet is the part where it sticks.

What makes insight stick is not repetition. It is recognizing the underlying story that produced the pattern in the first place — and choosing, consciously, a different one.

The most important questions of the week.

Take your time with these.

- 1 What is the limiting belief or story that has been most in the way of your business growing the way you want it to?
It often sounds like: "If I stop pushing, it all collapses." Or: "I have to figure this out myself." Or: "Success requires sacrifice." Find your version. Make it specific.
- 2 Where or when did you first learn this story? Who did you learn it from?
- 3 What has this belief cost you — in your business, and in your life?
- 4 Is it actually true?
- 5 What is the new story you're choosing to tell yourself now?
- 6 What becomes possible from inside the new story?

A CLOSING COMMITMENT

Write the new story in a single sentence. Make it specific. Make it yours.

Then write underneath it the one thing you will do this week that only makes sense from the new story.

That is how it starts to stick.

The door, and the room behind it.

This week was the door.

The work it points to — the slow re-patterning of how you actually operate as an entrepreneur — is the room behind the door.

For some of you, the week will have done its job and you'll walk forward from here on your own. That is a real and good outcome.

For others, what you saw this week will make the next layer obvious — and the question won't be whether to keep going, but who to do it with.

If that's you, the next conversation is open.
