

Get More Coaching Clients

SIGN 2 - 4 NEW CLIENTS EVERY MONTH

How To Sign 2 - 4 New Coaching Clients Every Month

By Jason Moss

Multi-six-figure business coach

Let's get one thing out of the way...

If you're here, I know you're a great coach.

When you get in the room with someone, you can change their life forever.

You're ambitious, self-led, ready to take massive action...

And you've signed at least a few paying clients already...

Which means you're just the kind of coach who has what it takes to build a thriving, six-figure business.

There's just one little problem...

Getting more clients to coach.

You're showing up, posting on social media, reaching out to your personal network, doing all the right things to market your business...

But new clients are inconsistent...

And your coaching income is up and down.

If this sounds like you, you're not alone.

After scaling multiple coaching businesses past six figures...

And helping thousands of other coaches...

I know firsthand what it looks and feels like when your marketing isn't fully dialed in.

The good news is, it doesn't have to be this way.

You're about to discover a simple roadmap you can follow to get more coaching clients, more consistently...

Regardless of what kind of coaching you do.

I used this roadmap to generate over $1 million in sales as a coach...

(As I'm writing this, we just hit our first $100k month and will hit seven figures in revenue this year.)

But it's not just about the money...

I love seeing coaches with the biggest hearts, who deeply desire to make an impact, change the world and help others...

Empowered with the tools they need to make that happen.

That's my greatest mission...

And why I'm so excited to share this guide with you.

4 Simple Steps To Get More Coaching Clients ASAP

My first few years as a coach weren't easy.

I only made $4,728 my first year...

Because when it came to marketing my business...

I was missing so many of the keys I'm about to share with you.

But after years of trial and error, experimenting with nearly every online marketing strategy...

I realized attracting more clients isn't as complicated as it might seem.

You don't need fancy funnels or to spend all day dancing on reels or DMing strangers...

In fact, there are only 4 steps you need to take to sign 2 - 4 new clients per month, consistently...

(Which is enough to hit six figures, replace your income and quit your 9 - 5 for good.)

I've seen this 4-step roadmap work for coaches in all different niches, all over the world...

- Meaghan went from making $3k in six months to hitting consistent $20k+ months in less than a year...
- Andrew made $59k in six months after joining us inside Coaching Launchpad...
- Karuna hit her first 15k month, quit her grueling job as a massage therapist and went full time as a health coach...
- Ariel increased her coaching income by 429% after feeling stuck in her business for over a year...

The 4-step roadmap I'm about to share with you helped them make that happen.

I call it the "LAUNCH" method...

And it's the same process I teach coaches how to apply in detail inside Coaching Launchpad, my flagship group mentoring program.

Inside this guide, I'll walk you through an overview of the LAUNCH method and show you the biggest pitfalls to avoid in each step...

So you can start attracting more clients ASAP.

Let's dive in...

Step 1: Get Clarity On Your Niche

I think of building a coaching business like building a house.

Now, I'm not an architect. I've never built a house before...

But I can imagine, if I was building a house, the first thing I'd focus on is the foundation.

I'd make sure that was in place before I built the walls, the windows, or the ceiling...

Otherwise the house would fall apart.

The same thinking applies when it comes to building your coaching business.

Your niche — or the specific group of people you serve — is the foundation of your business.

It's the most important key to your success...

And if you don't have one, haven't chosen the right one, or aren't 100% clear on what your niche is, it's going to be a tough ride.

You'll struggle to stand out, because if you don't know exactly who you're speaking to, it's impossible to create content and messaging that draws the right people in.

On the flip side, once you know what your niche is, you can position yourself as an expert at helping a specific group of people solve a specific problem.

This will make it a million times easier to stand out and attract high-ticket clients consistently.

Here are some of the biggest mistakes to avoid in this area...

Mistake #1 - Trying to appeal to everyone

Some coaches avoid choosing a niche because they think they can help everyone (and often want to). This desire comes from a good place, but it's misguided — because without a clear niche, your offers and messaging will end up sounding so vague and generic that you'll have a hard time attracting anyone you can help.

(This looks like a website or posts with messaging like “change your life!” or “uplevel your career, your relationships, your finances and your health!” This is what vague, generic messaging sounds like, and it's a symptom of not having a clear niche and not knowing the exact problem you solve for your clients.)

Other coaches are afraid to niche down because they think if they do, there won't be enough clients out there for them. The opposite is actually true. The more you narrow your focus, the more you become like a lighthouse to the right people. Casting a wide net makes it harder to sign clients, not easier.

Here's the mindset a six-figure coach has when it comes to choosing their niche...

"I'm not for everyone. I get to pick and choose my clients. I'm looking for a very specific person I know I can help and that I'll enjoy working with. If you're not in this lane, I'll gladly refer you elsewhere."

The first step is to embody this mindset. After that, you need to get clear on what your niche actually is (a big part of what I help my clients do).

Mistake #2 - Building an offer before you know who you're selling to

A lot of people start coaching because they've found something they've used to successfully transform their own lives that they're excited to share with others.

This could be a specific modality like NLP, a transformation like trauma healing, or a practice like breathwork.

These coaches are often so excited about what they do that they skip over the crucial step of finding a group of people with a specific need their coaching can address. They put the cart before the horse and build a coaching offer before they even know who they're selling it to.

As a result, they have a hard time getting clients, because they're approaching things backwards — trying to sell what they do, instead of a solution to a problem a specific group of people have.

This is why you always want to get clarity on what your niche is first, before you build your coaching offer. Once you find a group of people who need something, you can build an offer that meets that need. This is how you create an offer that sells (more on that later).

Mistake #3 - Selling to a low-desire niche

I see lots of coaches trying to sell to niches that don't really feel the need to make a change in their life.

For example, if you're a relationship coach, and your niche is people who are already in happy marriages but just want to hit that "next level" of intimacy...

There may be some people that would jump on this, but most within this niche would consider coaching a "nice to have." This is an example of a low-desire niche.

On the flip side, a couple who's on the brink of divorce would feel a lot more urgency around making a change and working with you. This is a high-desire niche.

If you're trying to sell to a low-desire niche, you'll have a harder time getting people on sales calls, and you'll encounter a lot more resistance when you sell. People will tell you "I need to think about it" or "it's too expensive," when what they're really saying is, "I just don't value this transformation enough to pay for it."

That's why one of the biggest keys to success is to choose a high-desire niche — a niche that really wants to make a change (and wants to make it now).

Your niche's "level of desire" is one of 5 keys that determine whether or not it's profitable. Inside Coaching Launchpad, we cover the other 4 keys in detail, and give you personalized feedback on your niche, so you can feel confident that you've picked the right one for you.

Free Resources To Help You Clarify Your Niche

- How To Find Your Niche As A Life Coach \(4 Simple Steps\)
- 5 Most Profitable Coaching Niches In 2024

Step 2: Build An Irresistible, High-Ticket Coaching Offer

The right offer can make or break your coaching business. Without an irresistible offer, it's very difficult to sign new clients. Even if your marketing is dialed in and you're booking sales calls consistently, you'll still struggle to get people to say yes on the phone.

When you've got a great offer, it becomes much easier to sign new clients. People will hear about what you do and get excited. And you'll get far fewer objections on sales calls, because when people really want something, they'll figure out a way to get themselves on board (even if finances are tight).

Here are a few big pitfalls to avoid when it comes to building your coaching offer...

Mistake #1 - Not framing your offer around an A → B transformation

If you're a coach who's selling one-off calls, bundles of calls you've packaged together, or a program that feels like a grab bag of disconnected information, you're going to have trouble making sales.

Why? Because you're selling something your niche doesn't actually want.

Remember — people don't want coaching.

Nobody wakes up in the morning and says "I want to spend thousands of dollars on a coach."

Similarly, people don't want calls with you, accountability, content, worksheets, or strategies...

What they want is simple...

To get from where they are today to where they want to be.

I call this the "A → B transformation."

When your offer is built and framed around this A → B transformation, you're not selling "coaching." You're selling what people want instead. This makes an offer more attractive and easier to sell. It's also one of the biggest keys to charging higher-ticket rates.

For example, if I were to get on the phone with you and pitch Coaching Launchpad...

I'd barely talk about our coaching calls, the in-depth training you'd get, exactly how we'd help you with your marketing...

I'd simply explain that Coaching Launchpad would give you everything you need to go from inconsistent clients (point A) to making $10k+ per month as a coach (point B).

That's the A → B transformation. And that's what you really want, isn't it?

This is how I easily enroll new clients into multiple-four and five-figure coaching offers week after week, while other coaches struggle to sell $100 calls.

I don't sell coaching. I sell what people want instead.

Mistake #2 - Offer doesn't meet a pressing need

The #1 reason coaching offers don't sell is because they don't meet a need your niche has.

The key to building a profitable offer is simple...

Figure out what your niche wants and give it to them.

This is why I take every coach I work with through an essential market research process before I help them build their offer. The key is to connect with people in your niche first and ask the right questions to figure out what they want. Then you can build an offer that's virtually guaranteed to sell.

Mistake #3 - Pricing too low

I see so many great coaches leaving thousands of dollars every month on the table because they're pricing their offers far below what they're worth.

Sometimes this is because they're pricing based on what they think an hour of their time is worth, versus the lifetime value of the transformation they're offering...

(Tip — always price offers based on the results they create for your clients, because that's what people are paying for, not your time.)

Sometimes it's because they're having trouble generating qualified leads, so they lower their rates to try to make their coaching more "attractive." Ironically, this leads to a vicious cycle by attracting more cost-conscious buyers who encourage them to lower their rates even further.

Here's the truth — your best clients aren't price shopping. They don't want the cheapest option. They want to work with you. And they make decisions primarily based on value and return-on-investment, rather than on what something costs. Which means when you drop your rates or talk about how "affordable" your offers are, you're literally scaring your best clients away.

Under the surface, low rates are often caused by deeper mindset issues — limiting beliefs around money, self-worth, or what it means to get paid for what you do. These blocks are super common and can be overcome, but left unchecked, they create an invisible barrier that holds you back from charging what you're worth.

The solution here is part strategy, part mindset. It's not enough to just "raise your rates." If you can't back these new rates with self-belief and an empowered money mindset, you'll self-sabotage and end up right back where you started.

This is why money mindset work is such a big part of what I do with our clients. Inside Coaching Launchpad, we help you make the internal belief shifts necessary to step into a more empowered mindset around money, so you can unapologetically own what your offers are worth and sign higher-paying clients with ease.

Free Resources To Help You Build Your Offer

- How To Price Your Coaching Package In 6 Simple Steps
- How To Create A High-Ticket Coaching Package \(\$3k+ Per Client\)
- 7 Reasons Your Coaching Program Isn't Selling

Step 3: Grow An Audience Filled With Your Ideal Clients

Once you know what your niche is and you've got a coaching offer they want...

You might be wondering...

"How do I attract more people who want to work with me?"

The best way to do this is to build an audience online.

When you do a good job here, you'll never have to worry about getting more clients. You'll have a constant stream of people applying to work with you, getting on calls, and signing up for your offers.

Most coaches don't realize how much of a game changer this is.

In my first coaching business, I built an audience of 50,000 followers online — mostly through creating and releasing free content on YouTube. These people were reading my emails every week, watching hours of my trainings, building a relationship with me as someone they knew, liked and trusted...

Whenever I wanted to fill spots for a new offer...

I'd send out a few emails and my inbox would be filled with sales and applications.

This is the power of growing and cultivating an audience online. It's one of the biggest keys to your success, and a big part of what I teach coaches how to do inside Coaching Launchpad.

Here are some common mistakes I see coaches make in this area...

Mistake #1 - Missing a consistent, repeatable way to grow your audience

Whether you have an audience of zero or 100,000...

Your first step is to find a consistent, repeatable way to get in front of new people in your niche...

So you can attract new followers and grow your audience over time.

Most coaches are missing this step or don't have it fully dialed in.

They might be posting content on their personal profile, but their audience isn't growing because they're not reaching new people. Or they're relying solely on referrals, which leaves them waiting for leads instead of proactively creating them. Or maybe they do a random act of marketing every once in a while — showing up in a couple of Facebook groups for a few weeks, speaking at an event or workshop, writing a blog post — but there's no cohesive strategy or consistency here.

As a result, their audience isn't growing, which means they're showing up and promoting their offers to the same people, day after day. It's no surprise that they aren't signing more clients.

This doesn't have to be you. Here are a few keys to success when it comes to growing your audience...

#1 - Keep it simple

You don't need to be in twenty different places or on every social media platform at once. Choose one or two platforms and follow a few proven growth strategies on each of them consistently. (We cover the most effective strategies for growing your audience in detail inside Coaching Launchpad.)

#2 - Stay consistent

The #1 reason coaches don't get traction is because they stop showing up. They try a strategy for a few weeks, and if it's not working right away, they give up or switch strategies too soon.

Growing an audience takes time and requires consistent effort. Commit to applying a specific strategy for at least 90 days before you evaluate whether or not it's working for you.

#3 - Focus on reaching the right people over the most people

It's easy to get distracted and start focusing on "vanity" metrics — views, followers and clicks — instead of asking yourself...

How do I get in front of the right people?

I'd rather see you in front of 10 people in your niche than 1,000 people who aren't.

So ignore how many views or clicks you're getting, and instead ask yourself — what can I do to make sure I'm getting in front of people who are a good fit to work with me?

—

Having a consistent, repeatable marketing strategy in place to grow your audience can make all the difference.

When Ariel, a purpose coach, came to me after two years of running her coaching business, she was only making a few thousand per month and feeling discouraged because new clients were inconsistent. She had already invested 10k into working with another business coach, but the program didn't deliver and she was understandably hesitant about working with someone new.

Once we started working together, I did a deep dive audit of her business. The first thing I noticed was that she had no consistent way to get in front of new people in her niche. We built out a custom strategy to help her do this in a way that felt aligned for her (so she'd enjoy the process) — and this helped her increase her revenue by 429% and hit her first 10k month.

This is the power of having a working "growth" strategy in place in your coaching business. Don't miss this.

Mistake #2 - Missing a proven process for nurturing your audience

Every week I get on the phone with coaches who choose to invest thousands of dollars into Coaching Launchpad after a single conversation.

These people already know what I do, see me as an expert, know I can help them, and are often ready to invest before I say a word.

How does this happen?

And more importantly, how can you do it too?

This is the result of creating and releasing lots of intentional content that warms my audience up over time, positions me as an expert, overcomes objections, and ensures people are 100% bought-in before they get on the phone.

Most coaches struggle to attract and enroll clients because their content is not doing a good enough job here.

They're posting lightweight how-to content, generic quote cards, inspirational content, irrelevant stories or posts created by someone else...

This is not the content that will get you clients.

The right content positions you as a leader — a world-class expert who can solve the specific problem your niche has and take them from where they are today to where they want to be. It creates tension, desire, authority, attraction and magnetism, without you having to have a single conversation. And all this takes place before you get on the phone with someone, so by the time they speak with you, they're already bought in.

It took me years to figure out how to do this.

To help speed up the process for our clients, I built a content creation framework called Belief-Based Messaging that shows you exactly how to create posts that turn strangers into red-hot leads that blow up your DMs, asking if you have the space to take them on as clients.

Inside Coaching Launchpad, I walk you through Belief-Based Messaging in detail, with 100+ examples of content you can model to start attracting more clients ASAP.

I love getting to see the impact this makes on the coaches we work with...

On a recent call, Andrea told me that when she posts now, she routinely has to block off 1 - 2 hours on her calendar to respond to the DMs she gets from people. She gets messages “paragraphs long” from people who say that her posts are describing exactly what they’re going through.

This is how you attract great clients — by using great content to call them in.

Mistake #3 - Not making consistent and compelling invitations to work with you

If you’re doing a good job growing and nurturing your audience...

You’ll always have people within it who are ready to work with you.

But to get those people to book a call, sign up for your offer, fill out an application...

They have to know exactly what to do next.

Which means you have to TELL them what to do...

Using BIG, bold, clear and benefit-driven language...

All the time, every day, as a regular part of your marketing efforts.

I call these “invitations” — and they can make the difference between an empty calendar and an inbox filled with leads who are excited about working with you.

You can make invitations in two ways...

Through content and conversations.

The key is to use both consistently — adding compelling, scroll-stopping invitations to your content to call the right people in, as well as actively opening up conversations with people within your audience who might be waiting in the wings and leading them towards the next step.

If you’re not happy with the number of new clients you’re signing, the first question I’ll often ask is — are you making enough invitations? If not, start doing this more regularly, and watch your income and impact grow.

Free Resources To Help You Grow Your Audience

- How To Create Content That Gets You Coaching Clients
- Use THESE Words To Get More Coaching Clients \(Messaging Tips\)
- Get More Coaching Clients When You Do THIS \(Invitation Tips\)

Step 4: Build An Enrollment Process To Turn Leads Into Clients

Once you've got the first three steps in this guide dialed in, you'll have a consistent flow of new leads reaching out to you, asking about your offers.

But once this happens, you'll probably find yourself with a new problem...

"Once someone reaches out to me, how do I get them to sign up?"

The single best way to do this is by getting them on the phone.

(Not by sending them to a sales page, website or DM chat...these things can be great later on, but if you're making less than 10k / month, keep your pricing and details about your offer off your website and get on the phone instead.)

These calls last about an hour, and there's a very intentional process you need to follow when running them to maximize the chance that someone ends up signing up to work with you.

With this enrollment process in place, you can easily sign new clients without being pushy or salesy.

Here are the biggest pitfalls to avoid when it comes to enrolling new clients...

Mistake #1 - Needy energy

Before I started helping coaches, I spent a year as a Director of Sales in a multi-seven-figure coaching business.

That time was a masterclass in learning how to sell coaching effectively...

And after listening to countless sales calls from my team and studying the behaviors and activities that increased their close rate...

I learned that the #1 thing that scares great clients away on the phone isn't necessarily what you say...

But the energy behind your words.

Needy, desperate energy is one of the biggest sales call killers.

This can show up in a lot of different ways, including:

- Too much focus on building rapport because you want them to like you
- Avoiding asking difficult questions because you're afraid you'll make them uncomfortable
- Using validation to stop them from feeling painful emotions instead of helping them experience the full emotional impact of the challenges they have
- Going WAY over time or spending lots of time talking through every fear and concern they have about signing up
- Trying to "convince" them you're the right fit instead of asking the right questions to help them sell themselves

All this stuff scares great clients away quicker than anything else.

The energy of an in-demand, sought-after coach is very different. It feels more like this...

"I care about you and want what's best for you, but I don't need you. I've got lots of other people who are excited about working with me, so I'm not here to convince you that we're a good fit. I'm here to figure out what you need, whether I can help you, and if you're a good fit for what I do. If not, I'll gladly refer you elsewhere."

Try this on during your next call — it's much more attractive.

Mistake #2 - Leads not warm enough

A lot of coaches wonder why they aren't closing more sales.

The truth is, their leads are just too cold. They're getting on the phone with people who don't really know who they are and what makes their coaching unique, or haven't seen proof they can deliver...

If you're getting on sales calls with people like this, you'll likely face a lot of objections...

"It's too expensive...I need to think about it..."

What someone is really saying is...

"I barely know you, and I just don't trust you yet."

The #1 thing that influences your close rate on a sales call is everything that person sees BEFORE they get on the call with you.

So ask yourself — what do people need to see before they get on a call with me, so they can come to the call ready to make a decision?

If you can create and release content that "pre-sells" people before they speak with you, you'll save a lot of time and increase your close rate dramatically.

Mistake #3 - Trying to "overcome" objections

The coaches I work with often ask me...

"What do you say when someone says 'I need to think about it' at the end of a sales call?"

Often times, they're looking for a quick fix, a rebuttal they can use to "overcome" the objection and close the sale.

But here's the truth...

Trying to "overcome" objections rarely works.

A better approach is to prevent them from happening in the first place.

You do this by asking the right questions earlier on in the call.

When you ask the right questions, you'll help people sell themselves before you even get to your pitch. As a result, the back end of your calls will often be pretty easy — simply collecting payment details and telling them what happens next — no pressure, no pushing, no being "salesy."

This is what happens when you know the right questions to ask — questions that connect people to their own desire to want to make a change and work with you. These questions are a big part of what I teach the coaches I work with inside Coaching Launchpad, so you know exactly what to say to sign more clients over the phone.

Free Resources To Help You Enroll More Clients

- How To Handle Objections On A Sales Call \(For Coaches\)
- How To Sell Coaching Without Being Salesy
- When They Say You're Too Expensive

---

So there you have it...

That's the LAUNCH method...

The four steps every coach needs to take to start attracting 2 - 4 new clients per month, consistently.

As a recap, here are the four steps again...

1. Choose a clear and specific niche
2. Build an irresistible, high-ticket coaching offer
3. Grow an audience filled with your ideal clients
4. Use your enrollment process to turn leads into clients

Once you apply these four steps in your coaching business, you'll start seeing a consistent flow of new leads and more clients coming in the door.

You'll wake up to an inbox filled with applications and messages from people reaching out and asking if you have the space to take them on...

You'll be able to pick and choose, working only with clients you'll love...

And start experiencing the freedom and fulfillment that comes from making great money creating incredible transformations in other people's lives.

So at this point, you might be asking...but HOW?

How do I take this 4-step roadmap and apply it?

To my business, my niche, the unique work I do...

If this sounds like you...if you're someone who's gotten value out of this free guide and you're ready to take those next steps...

Here's the next step I recommend...

Map out your path to 2 - 4 new clients every month

Over the past few years, I've supported more than a thousand coaches and entrepreneurs — helping them attract more clients and grow in a way that actually feels like them.

If that's what you want — more clients, more income, more you — your next step is a free 20-minute assessment call, one-on-one with me.

On this call, we'll:

- Take a closer look at your business together
- Map out what's possible for you
- Get clear on what needs to shift for you to start creating it

If it feels like I can help on a deeper level, I'll share what next steps could look like. Either way, you'll walk away with more clarity.

Book your free 20-minute assessment call now.

---

That's all I've got for now...

I hope you enjoyed this guide...

And I hope we can stay connected.

It's been an honor sharing some of the biggest lessons I've learned with you.

With love,
Jason